permit the general's action as her husband would be promoted.

PROMISED TO WED.

Under questioning by Sir Edward, the witness admitted Mr. Bain lived for a time in her home and that she promised to go to South America with him as his wife.

Mrs. Dennistoun broke down again when Sir Edward asked what she was doing to promote this case, entering:

"Nothing! Nothing like the thousands Colonel Dennistoun paid to have me followed everywhere." The witness said it was untrue that she had expected the daughter, Lady Carnarvon, when Colonel Dennistoun married after the dissolution of his first union, would pay, rather than have this case go to trial.

Mrs. Dennistoun under cross-examination regarding the most intimate details of her life, admitted that after the death of General Cowan and about the time she was being divorced by Colonel Dennistoun she was friendly with Bain, she admitted she was expecting a child at that time, but denied that she appeared to Dennistoun to require her divorce him so she could marry Bain.

BUNGALOW CASE.

Mrs. Dennistoun admitted Bain showed her at the bungalow Cowan provided for her at Condon Beach, but said that the general knew of these visits. She said she planned to marry Bain but that Denegor Cowan Carnarvon advised her not to do so.

"How many men have you been in your life," asked Sir Edward. "I give you the last," the judge intervened.

"Oh, me, Sir Edward, you better

If President Coolidge felt elated by the mighty acclaim given him as his automobile swept down Pennsylvania avenue in the inaugural parade, his features and bearing fail to reveal the emotion in the photograph. one of the oldest Italian families, which also has an ancient Hungarian branch. The Prince is the son of Prince Odo, who married the Countess Andorffy.

Mrs. Dennistoun admitted that while in Budapest she received cablegrams from America from a "Mr. P." who has been described as an intimate friend of the young Lord Carnarvon.

She admitted she saw Prince Odo several times in Budapest, but that she never had stayed in Budapest more than ten days.

When asked if she had gone to Spain and Portugal with Colonel James, Dennistoun replied:

"Yes, with Colonel James and a lady. It was one of my business trips."

Marshall Hall as counsel for Colonel Dennistoun attempted to show that Mrs. Dennistoun when writing letters to her former husband stating she was "absolutely dead and out" actually had money.

NOT DOWN AND OUT.

The witness admitted that she was not literally "down and out" but that was her feeling, she said. She denied intimacies that she expected to get money from Colonel Dennistoun after his marriage with Denegor Countess Carnarvon.

She said she asked the Colonel about his relations with Lady Carnarvon and told her he didn't think he would marry Lady Carnarvon.

The defense was attempting to tear down the structure built on Mrs. Dennistoun's statement, in that she was called on to make great sacrifices to gain promotion for her husband.

NOTABLE FIGURE.

Sir John Cowan was one of the greatest war figures in Britain. He led and clothed the army in masterly fashion and was described by his official biographer as the "greatest quartermaster since Moses."

When he died in April, 1921, Cowan left $40,000, which was swallowed up by the payment of his debts and his widow was forced to offer for sale his military decorations.

Nevertheless, Mrs. Dennistoun testified that from the time she was associated with the General at the beginning of 1916, he treated her handsomely. She said:

"I was devoted to him. He was a very charming man with a wonderful personality."

When Sir Edward Marshall Hall began to cross-examine her today he directed his questions to the real object of the suit.

She answered:

"I am a woman all alone and have no male support."

He asked:

"Now is this absolutely true? If the woman who has married your husband is a very rich woman, how many do you think she would be prepared to pay to avoid a case like this?"

Blackmail Threat for Lady Carnarvon

London, March 5.—Excerpts from three sensational letters were read in the "General X" case.

Colonel Dennistoun writes his wife, before their divorce, but after the beginning of her affair with "General X," now known to have been Sir John Cowan:

"I wish for your sake I had never dragged you into this middle."

When Mrs. Dennistoun sued for divorce, he wrote:

"I do feel you could have sacrificed more if you had loved me."

After, as she alleges, Mrs. Dennistoun had failed to get the money he had promised in lieu of alimony, she wrote the colonel, now the husband of Lady Carnarvon:

"If you don't do something for me, I'll not only expose your character, but will show you were living with Lady Carnarvon during her husband's life."

As soon as he married the Countess Carnarvon.

The lawyer said:

"Do you suggest that Colonel Dennistoun and Lady Carnarvon were acquainted during the lifetime of Lord Carnarvon?"

Mrs. Dennistoun replied:

"I do not suggest it because I do not know."

"Do you suggest any relationship between your husband and Lady Carnarvon except after they were married?"

Sir Edward Marshall Hall declared that just before Colonel Dennistoun married Lady Carnarvon he was literally starving, being reduced to carrying messages for people and getting two meals.

Sir Ellis Williams, the plaintiff's lawyer, drew from her the statement that during January, 1924, over $200,000 was paid into Colonel Dennistoun's banking account.

A balance of about $100,000 was drawn out on January 31, the day after the writ in the present action was served. Colonel Dennistoun married Lady Carnarvon in December, 1924.

Remember the Magic Hat of the fairy tale? When there was an adventure to be met, the Prince put on his Magic Hat, and immediately his cleverness became keener. The fairy tale is based on sound psychology.

For hats have a psychology all their own. Their effect on your wearer is unmistakable, and she is a wise lady who makes use of Magic Hats. There's a hat for every mood one wishes to emphasize, and for moods neither becoming nor pleasant, hats are often the remedy.

If You're Feeling Demure

There are quaint, pensive little bonnets from under whose brims eyes may regard the world with provocative earnestness. Dainty colors enhancing soft curls and softer words. Demure hats are a great privilege and responsibility, because all the world loves them. These are the hats endorsed by song and verse, because they have been worn by the world's dream girls who "flashed their hands in a fairy tale, and their mouths from a valentine."

If You're Interested In Business

And want to impress someone with your competence, there's nothing can help so much as a tailored hat. It sits snugly on your eyebrows, keeping your thought next and compact under its crown. If you happen to glance in a mirror in the midst of business—accidentally—it will assure you of your ability, and urge you on. Even your Dad, who thinks of you in rompers, would be impressed with a strictly tailored hat.

When You Would A-Sporting Go

You want a hat that will express your vivacity at the same time. It must be both comfortable and smart, with the variety of your own varied interests. It should be adaptable enough to be equally at home on the golf course, in the city, at the "game," in a motor, or at tea when your activities are over for the afternoon. Sport hats are clean-cut and sure of themselves, these days, just as are the girls who wear them.

If Your Mood Is Lively

You need defiant little hats that express themselves jauntily with a dashing feather or a scintillating buckle. They are the hats one lifts boldly on one's head, before starting out to conquer the world, and they happen not to be feeling quite as lively as you need to, this hat across your courage, and starts you out with a swagger.

Are You Sophisticated?

This is one of the most approved moods this year, and it's very becoming to some types. Especially if sophistication takes the form of a worldly-wise hat, apparently naïve, but really knowing in every line. Sophisticated hats are more numerous than ever this year, because they so good-naturedly take the world into their confidence, and admit in every artificial angle that it's really the same good old style of girls playfully misquoting under the new guise!

FLEETS READY FOR ACTION IN NAVAL 'WAR'

Officers Busy on Battle Problems as Armadas Close in Off Pacific Coast

Aboard U. S. S. Seattle, March 5 (A.P.)—The sixth day of war for the fighting craft of the United States navy, engaged in the greatest maneuvers ever held in the Pacific, finds the staff officers of both fleets actively engaged in battle problems. Warships engaged in the maneuvers are divided between the Black and Blue fleets. When "war" was declared the Black fleet was engaged in target practice in the Caribbean Sea.

The Pacific coast was denuded of its strength as the fleet of the Blue fleet (Blue forces) was sent through the canal. With the declaration of war the intelligence service information in the hands of the defensive fleet, the Blue fleet, was that a great Black fleet with a train of supply ships was starting for the Pacific coast from Christmas Island, some 2,600 miles in the Pacific.

Whether the Black fleet intended to shell Los Angeles or San Francisco or to establish a menacing operating base off the Lower California coast to cut American naval forces from the Pacific States, was the problem for the Blue fleet.

GOODWIN FLAYS COURT RULE IN AUTO CASE

Following his appearance in Central Municipal Court, where his testimony was ruled out by Judge Burke, Motor Vehicle Registrar Frank A. Goodwin has issued a statement, declaring that the case was "a typical illustration of being able to get out of a case if you can hire first-class lawyers."

The case in which the registrar's testimony was barred involved Herbert A. Lowe, Louis J. Calabrese and Raymond P. Stewart, motorists charged with robbing a stolen automobile. Judge Burke dismissed the men after barring the registrar's testimony.

It developed that the registrar summoned stewardship to his office under a pretext that he wanted to discuss a violation of the motor law, when in reality he wanted to see whether or not Stewart's machine was a stolen car.

Attorneys John P. Feneley and James T. Hughes, representing the defendants, brought out the fact that the registrar promised Stewart that nothing he said in court would be used against him. It was then the registrar's testimony was stricken from the record.

"If this decision is correct, no official will have a right to ask a person in possession of stolen goods to present these goods for the purpose of identification. If the judge is right in his decision, it is another indication that the laws are made and administered for the protection of the violators of the law, when they should be used for their detection," said the registrar in his statement.

SILENT BANDITS LOOT GROCERY STORE

Lock Proprietor in Room and Rob Shop Without Uttering One Word

Teamwork was exemplified to the Nth degree by a pair of bandits who looted the delicatessen store of Louis E. Hargrave at No. 118 Chiswick road, Brighton.

The man locked the proprietor in the rear room after taking all the money from his pockets, looted the cash register and then emptied the contents of the small change till into their pockets after which they fled the store. During this entire performance, neither man spoke a word or uttered a sound.

As mechanically as though they were going through an old rehearsal, the hoodlums went about their work. Each knew what part he was to play and he went about it in businesslike manner.

The pair obtained $145 from the proprietor's pockets and about $25 from the cash register and change drawer.

SHAKEUP DUE IN BOSTON DRY FORCES

R. Q. Merrick, New York Chief, to Take Over Division Office in Hub

The Federal prohibition force in the Boston district is due for a big shake-up within the next few days, according to reports from Washington.

Divisional R. Q. Merrick, chief enforcement officer at New York for the past five years, is slated to come to Boston to take over the position now held by Division Chief M. C. Street, who will be transferred.

Palmer Canfield, prohibition director in the New York district, is slated for a transfer. He will be succeeded by Thomas Stone, a veteran revenue agent now in charge of dry operations at Columbus, O.

The job made vacant in New York by the removal of Chief Merrick to the city, is to be taken by Daniel J. Lavin, who is now located in California.

The Boston prohibition agents have heard rumors of the shake-up, but no one could be found who was going to discuss the rumored changes which are slated to occur about the middle of the month.

It is said the shake-up in the enforcement branch is due to a policy adopted by the Washington officials at the head of the work.

Both were detained as material witnesses in the prosecution of LeRoy A. MRS. JAMES EAVES

Peterson, N. J.—"I can't begin to tell how much comfort and relief Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription has given me and I have recommended it to many other women who have taken it with the same good results," said Mrs. James Eaves of 119 23rd Ave., Paterson, N. J. "Before I learned of the 'Prescription' I suffered with inward trouble something awful and especially did I suffer during motherhood. After I took the 'Favorite Prescription' I had no trouble at all, was well and strong during the three expectant periods, and comparatively no suffering and my children were very healthy and strong. And in addition to the help it gave me during expectancy it relieved me of all my inward trouble and I have had no return of this ailment. I have kept well and strong, all of which I owe to Dr. Pierce's 'Favorite Prescription'."

I was His White Slave

As truly as if I had been kidnapped instead of married . . .

"I must speak," a girl-wife writes to the editor of SMART SET. "I have been tormented by the tongues of accusers as pitiless as those who pinned the scarlet letter to the girl in the novel, and, to defend myself, I want folks to know how my father sold me into marriage to a brute, and why I ran for shelter to Brace Gordon's little cabin on the beach."

"I reckon I know how I'll make you stay home and be decent!" — Pierre La Blanc cried.

"Then I whispered in my dog's ear."

IN Father's code it was woman's one business to marry and have children. Love? It didn't seem to enter into Father's plan for me when he forced me to marry Pierre La Blanc—a man twice my age. It brought Father a fourth interest in Pierre's fishing-smacks, and it brought me . . .

"In the days Pierre was home, I suffered a scorching bit of hell, but he had gone away for two weeks when Brace Gordon came.

"Something new and strange awakened in my heart. I was just seventeen and knew nothing of love and marriage except that I had suffered.

"I felt the firm clasp of a steady, strong hand. I met the level gaze of deep, gray eyes. Brace Gordon was a painter, come to our fishing village to get a touch of color for his work.

We were constantly together. I had no thought of being untrue to Pierre. All I asked was a little happiness. Whatever might be the penalty, for two weeks I was going to be happy!

Then Pierre came back. "I've heard about your goings on. Think a woman of mine can make a huzzy of herself and me not know it?"

"He grasped my arms. His fingers dug into my flesh like talons. I clenched my teeth to keep back a cry of pain. He crushed me in his great hairy arms and covered my face, throat and shoulders with vicious kisses. . . .

"That's one lesson. You've got another coming!" he sneered. "I reckon I know how to make you stay home and be decent."

"I whispered in my dog's ear. Pal, a black streak of hate and blind fury, flew straight at Pierre's throat. . . . But after all I could not see Pierre torn to shreds before my eyes; I quieted Pal with the touch of my hand.

"That night . . .

What mad resolve led the girl up the beach to the artist. What happened when Pierre, aflame with vicious motives followed the girl the law said was his property? Thrillingly, truthfully, the girl tells the surprising conclusion that came in her conflict with legalized brutality.

VANCE BALKS AT 10-DAY CLAUSE; WON'T SIGN

Clearwater, Fla., March 6.—The Dodgers received a rude shock to day when Eddie Vance announced that "Izzy" Vance has not signed his contract.

On Monday morning the Brooklyn boss stated that Vance had actually signed a contract for a 10-day trial, but it seems that Vance merely signed a paper agreeing to sign a contract.

When the contract was offered him the pitcher refused to sign the document until the 10-day clause is removed.

Liberté declares that he cannot do this because any contract with a 10-day clause would not be as good as the Baseball Commission. The monetary terms of the contract, and in $20,000 for the three years, are satisfactory to Vance.

MITCHELL CALLED BY BRAVES

Secures Leave of Absence at Harvard After Urgent Call From South

By NICK FLATLEY
Fred Mitchell, business manager and former pilot of the Braves and a coach of no mean ability, leaves tomorrow for St. Petersburg, Fla., where he will assist Manager Harry Bancroft in whipping the Braves into shape.

Mitchell has been coaching the pitching candidates at Harvard, but has secured a leave of absence. It is understood the call South was urgent.

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 6.—President Cherry MacKewen, Judge Pucka, Manager Bancroft and the Braves battersmen were all set to meet the invading Irish fighters who register tonight and start active campaigning in the morning.

The officials of the reception committee were a bit anxious because several of their pet athletes have signified intentions of holding out, and apparently mean it.

JUST WAIT FOR WELSH.
No sound has been heard from Mickey O'Neill, catcher, or Stuffy McInnis, first baseman, Jimmy Welch, the Lithium Pacific Coast outfielder, is sitting back waiting for the Seattle Club to give him part of his purchase price. He only wants a few thousand dollars, but evidently intends to wait it.

The Braves, of course, can do nothing in this case but wait. Looks as if Danny will be the only regular infielder held over, while the garden promises to sprout with entirely new blossoms. The time has come for a change, and Manager Bancroft, after last year's disaster, is willing to take all kinds of chances. He is beginning to warm up mightily to Fredy Luce as a second baseman. Fred, in good shape now, has been put through several busy days around the ball park, one of the best of the short stops, has been giving him all kinds of work and the corps of young pitchers has been coming through.

BRAND NEW INFIELD.
With Burns, formerly with the Athletics, as first, Luce as second, Danny at third, and Marriot, from the minors, parked around third, the Brave inner defense will be considerably changed. No matter what happens they will be able to field better than they were a year ago. Marriot and Burns have to be tried out in the bullpen pot here, but both have been stamped by all sorts of scouts as ready for the large part of Matty and Judge Pucka are conferring with the local authorities to day, about next year's training camp. The Braves have been in Miami, and has two large offers from that part of the world. The boys feel that they sort of got the air when the Yankees were run in and they will not stand for that. Polka in St. Petersburg are making valiant efforts now to develop their idea, and things may be ironed out before the day is over.

OLD TIME SPORT STORIES

By GEORGE W. TUOHY

'Mysterious Billy' Smith Was One of Hardest Hitters Among Oldtime Ring Stars

This is the forty-fourth of a series of articles on oldtime athletes by George W. Tuohy, famous sports promoter, who has been prominent in athletics for thirty years.

"Mysterious Billy" Smith! A peculiar moniker, you say? Many asked that same question and there have been many answers, some of them partially correct and just as many merely a guess. That name was coined on him by the late Capt. A. W. Cooke, editor-in-chief of the Old Police News, and even today when Billy is in the shiping business in the Pacific North west he is still known by it.

One day, in 1892 there drifted into Boston from the Maritime Provinces a clean cut chap, rosy cheeked and wholesome looking. He declared that he was a fighter seeking matches with any welterweight. Asked what his name was he replied: "Amos Smith, of St. John, N. B."

Proved Great Puncher

"Amos" Amos? That's a—of a name for a fighter," and one. And other remarks of the same nature were passed. However, Smith got a few, very few in fact, minor scraps which he showed a crude policy so far as a strike was concerned, but my, how that baby could punch.

With no prospects of getting work around here at a time when there was such wars as Paty Kerrigan (the O'Connell, fiddle O'Connell came over) and others of that stripe, Smith drifted away and was lost sight of.

Then one day the Associated Press brought the information that "Billy" Smith of Boston defeated Spider Kelly in five rounds at the California A. C.

Nobody could place any "Billy" Smith, for none associated him with the rosy cheeked chap who had been around a few months before.

A week or so later along came another press dispatch to the effect that "Billy" Smith of Boston had been beaten by Frank Purcell, in ten rounds at the same California A. C. But the decision was a very questionable one.

Again the gang tried to identify this fellow, but with the usual result. Reports of his fight deluge came faster and faster, so that when he knocked out Frank Kelly in 37 rounds at the Pacific A. C. in San Francisco, a rather lengthy story of the battle was sent over the wires.

On reading the papers that morning, Captain Cooke remarked to those within hearing: "I see that 'Mysterious Billy' Smith is at it again. Wonder who he can be?" And from that chance remark came the name by which Smith was to be known ever afterwards as a ringster.

Best Danny Needham

In quick succession he knocked out Billy Armstrong, drew with Tommy West, beat Charley Gleason, stopped Shadow Maker and then the great Danny Needham, who had previously fought a 10-round draw with our own Paty Kerrigan, went down before Smith in 14 rounds.

Smith returned East as the king pin of the American welter weight division and was matched with Tom Lyons of Australia to fight for the world's championship in that class. They met at Coney Island on April 17, 1893, 45 rounds or more. The purse of $5,000 being almost a record for the period and the largest ever given for men of this weight division. Williams never had a chance and was knocked out in two rounds.

Tommy Ryan, then of Syracuse, and Smith and he were matched for a six-round bout in Boston, which ended in a draw. Both were disappointed and later met at Minneapolis, where Ryan was declared the winner on points after twenty-five rounds. Joe Choynski, then a stable mate of Ryan's and both under the

BEING REAL MOTHER?

By Carolyn Lisberg.
Lecturer and Writer on the Raising Up of Children.

Many mothers would not mind suffering embarrassment for a few moments in public, when a child cries or acts restlessly, the gain would be there as well as the child's. Recently I took on a tour with a woman carrying a suitcase and putting along a weary-looking girl of four, who was crying.

The mother, who was quite young, near me, lifted the child to her lap, took out a bag of candy and gave her a large round green ball. Soon the child showed symptoms of restlessness. "I want to get down," she insisted. But instead of permitting this the mother, trying to ward off a cry of protest, pulled another candy from the bag and gave it to the little one to keep her quiet.

Evidently this mother had no experience of child-rearing. Yet she was intelligent, looking, well-dressed and devoted to her little girl, who was attractively attired; yet she was avoiding the child's digestive and neglecting the youngster's first need—to move about and develop her muscles and so content her spirit.

Surely if the State requires school attendance, it should see that it should be followed in gradual steps without taking a course in motherhood.

BEDTIME STORY

By Foxy Grandpa.
"This is going to be a fine story," announced Bunny, turning his pink eyes toward the east.

"This oracle has spoken," I chuckle.

"What do you mean when you say 'the oracle has spoken'?" Foxy Grandpa, asked Bobby.

"The word oracle means a person of infallible wisdom," I said.

"In ancient Grecian times there were several oracles, or places where divine prophecies were announced, and among them was the famous oracle of Apollo at Delphi."

"This was what an old Greek historian by the name of Herodotus tells of the oracle at Delphi."

"It seems that once upon a time a shepherd was feeding his flocks on the side of Mount Parnassus, where there was a cavity in the earth."

"Now, this shepherd noticed that when his sheep and goats went near this great hole in the earth that they stopped around and danced in the most extraordinary manner. This was caused by a vapor which rose from the earth."

"Of course, when he reported this to his friends it was immediately hailed as an evidence of the presence of the gods."

"Immediately a priestess was placed in charge of this holy place and the words which she spoke when under the influence of this magic vapor were believed to be inspired by Apollo."

"A temple was built and the town of Delphi grew to be a great city immediately."

"Like Los Angeles," said Bobby, "has grown."

"Yes," I agreed, "or some place in Oklahoma where it has been discovered."

"No popular did this oracle become that several more priestesses called Pythias had to be appointed. But Pythias had to be appointed. But

Presidential Power

How the Billions Were Scattered

You realize the power of the United States President, greater than that of any king or emperor, when you learn how money, belonging to the people, was shovelled out in the late war.

In peace, with here and there some official outlaw daring a mild objection, there is some limit to presidential authority. But in war, with its hysteria, the mere words, "The President wills it," are sufficient.

After the war had ended, and there was no LEGAL authority in anyone to give away the public money, fifteen hundred millions of dollars were dished out to various countries in Europe, merely on Woodrow Wilson's personal order.

The responsible head of the Treasury objected feebly that he had no good excuse for sending the gigantic sums—thirty millions here, fifty millions there, more than four hundred millions to one country after peace had been signed—and there was no legal method of giving the people's money away.

"Then find an excuse" was the substance of the next order. The excuse was found. In one case a lie was used to the effect that Rumania was still at war. And a billion and a half of dollars were taken from the people's pockets, to be paid for later in taxation, and sent to Europe.

It was the price paid for some concession by Europe to the all-powerful envoy, self-selected, that spoke in Europe for the United States.

However, the man who sent the money, doubtless feeling that he was saving the world, and that fifteen hundred millions would not matter, is now dead and buried.

And in reality the country got off cheaply. The money was paid out of the public pocket as part of the plan of that famous League of Nations, and part of the plan was to tie this country up in the League. That League part failed, thanks be to heaven.

Many times fifteen hundred millions it would have cost us had we been caught in that trap. But we escaped and can afford the billion and a half added to all the other billions, so gallantly given away, squandered and paid out in graft.

When public hysteria makes even the mildest criticism of public officials high treason, the people are apt to be robbed, and they are robbed.

Experience of One Soldier

It Shows That Only Airplanes Can Deal With Airplanes

The following letter from a soldier in the late war will interest you:

Editor Boston Evening American: Have been reading your articles with a great deal of interest, especially those advocating a strong airplane defense for this country.

To my notion you have hit the nail square on the head in every case. Nothing would suit me better than for every publication in the U. S. to agitate that question until SOMETHING IS DONE.

Rickenbacker's testimony about the INEFFECTIVENESS of anti-aircraft guns is absolutely correct. I served fourteen months in France on three fronts and can testify to that. Most of the time I was on detached service with anti-aircraft. For your information I will quote two or three interesting paragraphs from my War Diary, and you are at liberty to make use of the information as you see fit.

"ADVANCE BT. MIHEL SEC- TOR, at Soullieuville, Sept. 25, 1918.

"Eight a. m. in broad daylight two Boches bombing planes circled over this town, flying as low as the trees, and using machine guns. A wounded French soldier in ambulance. Rumor that ONE of Boche planes was finally brought down by our machine gun fire. Even military police were firing REVOLVERS."

"ARGONNE RECTOR, AT Genesee (not far from Mont-faucon), Oct. 28, 1918.

"I stayed in quarters (a carpenter shop) to watch our belongings. This time the Boches were putting in base lines for artillery. Saw Boche plane drive into our observation balloons, not over 1,500 feet away. Balloon came down in flames. Boche ESCAPED without harm. U. S. men in balloons saw themselves by jump caps. Anti-aircraft guns could not stop the Boche."

Believe the above cases illustrate the point. That is, a few of MANY that I could cite, all along the same line. Can say this without my fingers crossed: NEVER ONCE saw a Boche plane brought down by American anti-aircraft guns, but DID SEE several brought down by American planes. A single plane is almost impossible target to hit. They are best shot down by our machine

Borglum Could Finish Job

The break in the relations between Gutzon Borglum and the authorities in charge of the great Confederate Memorial which Borglum had only fairly started to carve on the face of Stone Mountain in Georgia is most regrettable.

It would have been a unique memorial, and under Mr. Borglum's hand it would have been a masterpiece.

That there should have been any difficulty to finance such a memorial, embodying the affections of millions of people, seems ridiculous.

Vaster sums are easily raised for smaller purposes, and Mr. Borglum should have been given free rein for the play of his genius on the front of Georgia's mountain, and any friction over finances should have been impossible from the outset.

That Mr. Borglum ever should have been asked to bother about money suggests a situation which would make the ordinary artist throw up both hands.

Whatever the cause of the trouble, it is easy to understand Mr. Borglum's determination to follow his own conception of the masterpiece and refuse to let other hands carry it on, no matter what that determination involved.

There is a relationship between the artist and the children of his brain which resents as indignantly the intrusion of the outsider as does that other relationship with which we are more familiar, the relation between one and the child of his flesh and blood.

However, the important thing is the memorial and it is to be hoped that all of the parties may compose their differences and Mr. Borglum may resume his labors, untrammelled by interference and untrammelled by the necessity of passing the hat to finance the development of this great project.

SPILLS THE BEANS

MRS. SOLOMON SAYS

By HELEN ROWLAND

ASK me not, O my Daughter, how I have come to know men, and to learn the secrets of their hearts.

For lo, have I not known MUCH men a little, and one man much?

Yea, verily! And who that knoweth one man will understand a hundred.

Alas, what I should I do without my beloved?

Behold, he is Helen Rowland meat and bread and apple and house-plant unto me!

Yea, he is a bubbling spring that supplieth daily inspiration and drippeth sparkling "COPY!"

He is better than a Book of Knowledge! He is a post-graduate course in psychology!

For he is everything, both good and bad, that all men are—only MORE so!

His knoweth fifteen ways to make a woman suffer—and for every one of them a perfect alibi.

Of trying habits he lacketh not one; yet he is always a FRESH surprise!

Verily, verily, as an education he is not only the cat's eyebrows and the leopard's beauty-spot—he is the WHOLE ANIMAL!

Yea, when my Beloved faitheth me, I am not deceived.

For then, do I call unto me the Boy Friends of other women and persuade them to make of me their Mother Confessor and to "tell me ALL!"

Yea, I feed them with applesauce and I stay them with sympathy; and thus do I lure them to pour out their souls secrets to me.

For they LOVE to talk about themselves!

One telleth me of his heart's desire and another of his life's sorrow; with tellth me of his "method" with women, and another revealeth his heartaches.

Yet, all of them agree that the woman PERFECT them unto weariness.

And tales of their hairbreadth escapes from matrimony are ever thrilling than a Jules Verne novel.

Then, scorn not my maxims, my Daughters, but profit by my wisdom and the fruit of my labors, that they might not stumble in the path of flirtation nor take the wrong detour upon the road to happiness.

For whosoever, in their virtues and their sins, may differ one from another as black from white, yet in their follies and their frailties they are all ALIKE!

THE RYHMING OPTIMIST

By Aline Michaels

THERE'S no road forever keeps a downward trend, better things are waiting just around the bend. Have you, on some sunny, joyous Summer day, ventured in the forest, down a trackless way, found the sudden shadow, deepened into dusk, breathed strange odors, heavy as the Orient's mists? Have you wandered deeper, just within the mace forest,

FARSIGHTEDNESS AND NEAR SIGHT

By DR. FRANK CRANE

THE eye is a wonderful organ. Not the least wonderful thing about it is its ability to accommodate itself to the vision before it.

It can glimpse upward and see the stars; it can glimpse downward and see the dust on the ground. It makes this accommodation in a short space of time.

There are some people who have far-sight, but are unable to see things close about them. They see the stars, but fall in the ditch.

Such are sailors, who are accustomed to looking in the distance scanning the horizon and viewing far-off ships. In the city men are apt to become near-sighted. They read much. They are accustomed to looking at things close about them.

They become sophisticated and quick. The street Arab in the city is usually a lively chap. He has the power of quick accommodation. He knows what is going on around him and can quickly suit himself to circumstances. He is accustomed to dodging cars and otherwise looking out for himself.

The Kansas boy from the country is liable to get run over in the city. He had been looking at distant things along the prairie.

But the Kansas boy usually is more to be trusted than the city street Arab. He has more perspective and can see things better in their proper relation.

Many critics lack background. They have no far vision. They cannot see into the gist of things. They are merely sophisticated and quickly read what is on the surface.

The ancient distinction was between the sophist and the wise man. Sophism consisted in a dexterous handling of apparent truths, but wisdom meant an observation of hidden truths.

The perfect man has perfect accommodation. He can see that which is distant and can see that which is close. His eye adjusts itself.

He has fixed principles, high ideals, and far-off goals, but at the same time he is practical. He sees the road which he must travel as well as the end which he must attain.

He sees the difficulties that lie before him and the obstacles he must overcome, as well as the goal that he must attain.

There are very few men in history that have this rare accommodation of qualities. Some were idealists, having no practical knowledge of the way to attain their ends; others were opportunists and were deficient in idealism.

It is not only necessary to know what is good for ourselves and the race, but it is necessary to know how to attain it. Otherwise we shall be like the man who looked at the stars, but tripped up over the obstacles at his feet.

People who have ideals only, but no practical wisdom, are called visionaries; people that have merely practical wisdom, but no ideals, are called materialists or opportunists. The right man has the proper balance between the two.

You might call him an ideal opportunist, or an opportunist idealist. At any rate he illustrates the fact that the best man has a balance of qualities and is not extreme in any direction.

WHAT FIRST MADE THE OCEAN SALT

By Garrett P. Servis

Noted Astronomer and Writer on Scientific Topics of Popular Interest

THE ocean salt because of natural deposits of saltwater existing in it, because of the salt carried by rivers from the lands through which they flow.—M. P.

NOT many years ago your question would have seemed easier to answer than it does now.

Then it was generally assumed that the salt found in the waters of the ocean was mainly derived by washings from the continents.

It was assumed that, in the beginning, the ocean was fresh and gradually became saltier, owing to the continual supply from the lands.

A very interesting and somewhat mysterious index of the former connection of all animal life with the ocean was supposed by some to have been the singular fact that the bodily fluids of men and all the higher animal species containing percentages of about one-fifth of the percentage of sea water.

Assuming that life originated in the sea, but, in many of its forms, crept out upon the land, and there continents had been uplifted, long ago, it was argued that the varying percentages of salt in the bodily fluids of land animals must be a continuing condition that originated in the sea.

It is pointed out that there is great similarity between the generous proportions of volatile eruptions, which are very rich in chlorine and sulphates, and the salts found in sea water, which are of a similar nature.

On the sea may always have been salt, the first waters deposited being derived from an atmosphere in which watery vapor was mingled with vast quantities of metallic gases.

ONCE-OVERS

WHEN YOU FEEL LIKE GIVING UP, FIGHT HARDER

How is your "life-struggle" going with you? Are you mastering it, or are you?

Do you frequently feel like giving up? You know that you have made little headway when you compare your life with what it was one year ago and so you are tempted to give up the supreme struggle and remodel your life upon lines which require no personal effort. That is the last thing you want to do.

You are even willing to admit that you are quitting while there is a lot of fight in you.

Then you are deliberately placing yourself on the toboggan slide which leads to obscurity instead of making a fight and "holding your own" until you can improve your condition.

You may have a hard time when you are there. Why give up so easily?

Just around the corner you may find the opportunity you have been waiting for so long.

If once you get yourself down the ladder it is harder to climb back.
